Science Identity Development and Persistence through an Intersectional Lens: What is the Role of Undergraduate Research? Under Review with the National Science Foundation, $298,766, L. Schneider, P.I. (I am listed as Co-P.I., 12.5% annual effort)

RESEARCH EXPERIENCE:

Postdoctoral Research Associate, Scientific Careers Research and Development Group, Northwestern University Feinberg School of Medicine, July 2012-Aug 2016

The Academy for Future Science Faculty is a novel mentoring and intervention program originally designed to promote persistence toward academic careers and improve diversity among life science faculty. This study began in 2011-2012 with 16 career mentors (“Coaches”), 160 experimental students, and 160 control students, and is the first ever mixed methods longitudinal randomized controlled trial study of this size and type funded by the National Institutes of Health. We collected annual survey and interview data from all participants, and analyzed data for publications, reports, and presentations. We also contributed to the ASPET professional society Mentoring Network, and the National Research Mentoring Network (NRMN), a NIH-funded national consortium that provides enhanced mentoring and networking opportunities for underrepresented groups in the biomedical, behavioral, clinical, and social sciences.

Graduate Research Fellow, Center for Urban Research and Learning (CURL), Loyola University Chicago, Sept 2007-Aug 2010

The Center for Urban Research and Learning (CURL), one of the seven Centers of Excellence at Loyola University Chicago, is a community-based participatory action research center. CURL partners with communities and local, state, and national funders to identify problems and create solutions that emphasize social justice and equality, and promote an environment of enhanced teaching and learning for Loyola students. I lead many evaluation projects by collecting quantitative and qualitative data, analyzing data for reports and presentations, and supervising undergraduate students assistants.
